

Argentum, the leading national trade association serving senior living communities, invites you to attend a VIRTUAL BRIEFING:

Vulnerable Senior Populations in the Pandemic

MANY SENIOR CAREGIVERS STILL WAITING FOR CARES ACT RELIEF

Survey shows 45% of assisted living, memory care, and other senior living providers still have not received funding from the Provider Relief Fund; Nearly 40% foresee closures

Thursday, November 19 at 11:00 am EST

REGISTER TODAY

Learn more about the struggles of seniors in your state or district, and hear from caregivers and experts detailing the preparations needed to keep this frail population safe as the pandemic spreads.

- Despite caring for the population most vulnerable to the COVID-19 virus, many assisted living providers are still waiting for financial relief. As financial resources dwindle, closures are looming. For the senior residents of these communities, who need direct assistance with activities of daily living, such as eating, dressing, and personal care, it could mean losing their caregiver and their home.
- Assisted living communities are not nursing homes yet provide care for the same vulnerable population. Despite that, these communities are on track to receive just a small fraction of the relief of nursing homes. This wide discrepancy in relief could leave senior populations even more vulnerable to the pandemic.
- In a recent survey conducted by Argentum, nearly 75% of respondents said their expenses related to COVID-19 have increased significantly, and nearly 40% said they foresee the possibility of closures if their financial situation does not improve.

LEARN WHAT CAN BE DONE TO HELP THIS VULNERABLE POPULATION.